O. , 2006. LC Number: KF26 . C69 2003l OCLC Number: (OCoLC)68810419 Subject: Airlines -- United States -- Cost of operation. Excerpt: . . 11 Congress rushed to the airlines aid in response to the terrorist attacks in 2001, but rightly declined to approve a broader bailout. In a deregulated industry, compa-nies should be allowed to suffer the consequences of their mistakes in an economic slowdown. However, deregulation works both ways. Congress could do a great deal to help the airlines if it lifted protectionist limits on foreign investment in U. S. -based airlines. That would stimulate competition and provide troubled carriers with fresh sources of capital. The likes of Richard Branson, the British founder of Virgin Atlantic, should be encouraged to start a new airline in the United States, not dis-suaded. And if a big global player like Lufthansa wants to bail out United, so much the better. The Department of Transportation, for its part, must act as if it understands that airlines are entitled to compete in a deregulated industry. Although the government does have a duty to keep airlines from engaging in unfair practices such as below-cost predatory pricing to undermine competitors, it is not supposed to stop them from trying to improve their ability to sell tickets. For example, it is not clear why Transportation has delayed approval of a proposed marketing alliance linking Delta, Continental and Northwest, even after the Justice Department indicated that the deal posed no antitrust concerns. Troubled carriers everywhere are wooing partners to build alliances. United and Lufthansa are leaders of the global Star...
