Target exposure times were 3 seconds with 3-second inter-target intervals. Soldiers were kneeling in a foxhole (on outdoor carpet-covered tables placed in the foxhole) supported position for all trials (see figure 4). Appropriate hearing protection was worn at all times. Figure 4. Soldier in foxhole-supported firing position. 4. 2. 6 SWAT The SWAT (Reid, Potter, and Bressler, 1989) was used to quantify Soldier workload ratings during various conditions. SWAT has been validated with mathematical processing tasks of various levels for workload assessment. There are three workload dimensions that SWAT captures as well as overall workload: time load, mental effort load, and psychological stress load. The SWAT for measuring workload has both scale development and event scoring. Scale development is a card-sorting exercise conducted to determine the subjective conception of workload for each subject within the three dimensions. Event scoring is the process of recording the subjects rating for that specific task on the three load dimensions that can be collected rather quickly. A sample of the event scoring SWAT form is provided in appendix C. 7 This item ships from La Vergne,TN. Paperback.
