Nilda A. Aberasturi, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 208 x 137 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Half-Forgotten Things focuses on the Aberasturis, a prominent Spanish Basque family in Malitbog, a town in Southern Leyte, the Philippines. The memoir opens as Txomin Aberasturi returns to his hometown for a visit after a long absence. From the landscape, memories arise and are vividly recounted. We become familiar with the family's successful shipping and export business. We are presented with anecdotes of family adventures, which touch a universal human chord. When Txomin is eight years old, Pearl Harbor is bombed and life on the Philippines, and everywhere else, changes dramatically. There are many memorable characters depicted in this book, with traits to remind us of personalities encountered in our own lives. One of these is the American captain who organizes the guerrilla movement in Leyte during the Second World War, falls in love with Txomin's beautiful cousin. Their story is the basis of the book, and later the movie, An American Guerilla in the Philippines, starring Tyrone Power. The most compelling portrait in the book is that of the author's father, a man of overwhelming integrity, a hero to his son and to the reader. Txomin's father, Dionisio Aberasturi, a Basque from Vizcaya, Spain, at the hub of this memoir, is defined by his unshakable uprightness, all the more remarkable because they are not fictional. Two sisters of the author are at a boarding school in Spain when the Spanish Civil War breaks out. After the war, the author works hard alongside his father until he goes off to college. While he is away, his father dies in a tragic accident and Txomin returns for the funeral. The absence of...
