Not illustrated. 1888 Excerpt: .sterling on it under the door of a little empty house on the sea shore of a lonely desert (or dessert) island, as Emma Jane called it--whether you did or not, I may tell you that I know something more about that little empty house than the two little girls did. It was called Marine Lodge, only in fun. It was not the lodge of the Cold-acre Park of that island. We found no good old porter there, if you remember, to relieve the old poor at the gate of the gentleman of the country. No, indeed. It was an empty and deserted little house, and had been built by the crew of his Majesty s ship Cullender, which, having several holes in her bottom, had been run ashore by her prudent commander when he found that he and his crew could no longer escape0...
