Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Preludes of Harper s Ferry In the first winter month of 1838-39, a tall, spare man, under middle age, unbearded and of grave countenance, a rustic by his garb, entered a stationer s store at 108 Broadway, New York, and bought a little book for the pocket. A common-looking affair, as we now view it in a period of cheap paper, it contained about fifty ruled leaves, and was bound in boards, backed with leather, and sided with marbled paper. On the inside of the cover the buyer penciled his name, with date and place of purchase, which he presently repeated in ink on the opposite fly-leaf, as follows: Memorandum Book of John Brown Franklin Portage Co Ohio Bought Decem 3d 1838 of G and C Carvill Co Price $0.25. The price, two shillings, would be thought twice too dear to-day, and was equivalent in purchasing power to at least fifty cents of our present money. In the rural districts it meant an outlay of two square meals, as a cash account on page 29, for April 20, 1840, shows: To do for 2 dinners 0.25. Tested by this gauge, the poor have not grown poorer in the last half century of progress. The date, December 3, is noticeable. Our Man of the Second of December was entering on the first of the twenty-one years yet allotted him on this earth. Other men turn over a new leaf with the calendar year; by chance he seized the atom of time which was to mark New Style for the remnant of his days. Nearly enough, too, the memorandum-book stands for a parting of the ways...
